

SLASHING ATTACK PROMISES TO CRACK RHINE DEFENSES

First French Army Captures Mulhouse, West of River Rhine

S A GARRISON CITY City Has Peacetime Population of 100,000 and Extensive Fortifications

By International News Service
PARIS, Nov. 22—In a slashing attack that promises to crack all German defenses on the upper Rhine, troops of the French First Army today captured Mulhouse, great Maginot line garrison city just west of the river Rhine.

Mulhouse, southern terminus of an important railway line linking up with Strasbourg, is the first major city of the Rhine Valley to be taken by the Allies.

It has a normal peacetime population of about 100,000 and extensive fortifications.

Exploiting his spectacular drive through the Belfort Gap, Gen. Marie Emil Bethouart, commander of the French First Army, pushed his forces into Mulhouse in the face of violent German counter-attacks in the region south of Danne-Marie.

Hard street fighting was under way in the city of Belfort itself, but the town's fall was imminent.

Mulhouse is one of the key cities of Lorraine incorporated into Nazi Germany by Adolf Hitler within a few weeks after his defeat of France in 1940.

It had been under German control during the period between the Franco-Prussian war and defeat of Imperial Germany in the last conflict. As a key point of military importance on the historic route of conquest between France and Germany, it had been fortified continually through the centuries.

Headquarters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower meanwhile reported savage battles at many points along the western front and severe resistance encountered in most areas.

AIR SERVICE COMMAND, England—(INS)—High-fidelity, wide-range rear view mirrors, capable of reflecting an enemy plane long before it gets within firing range, are now aiding pilots of the battle-famed Thunderbolts and Mustangs. THANKSGIVING

The day is properly appointed by law and by custom for the returning of thanks to God for the increase of the earth. The season was bountiful. The people find themselves rich in food. They are so bountifully blessed that they are able to share the fruits of their labors and husbandry with peoples whose lands lie seared and untended in the wake of wars.

The people are thankful for strength in this hour of peril. In this strength they stand firm, unafraid and resolute. They are undismayed by the quickness of the tyrant's wrath or the fierceness of his greed. They know that the God which has so generously rewarded their toil and lighted the way for them to greatness of achievement looks only with sadness upon the tyrant's denial of religion and surrender to lust for the loot of materialism.

The people are thankful for the victories being achieved by the forces of right everywhere. In looking the world over for the peace in which all men of good will rejoice, the people are disappointed, for they find no peace. But they find in all enlightened men the more precious attribute of the heart—the desire for peace. Were it not so, men would submit to the tyrant and give themselves to a life of dread and suffering in which there is no peace. But they want peace. They so yearn and pray for it that they willingly give their lives that it may be brought back to earth.

To these men this country has pledged its all. It is thankful that it has much to give, that it sees the right, that it has the spirit to act and the will to make sure that freedom does not perish from the earth. Of such is its greatness, a greatness for which it owes and gives a full measure of thanks.

NAZI FLEET

So desperate are the prospects facing the Nazi warlords that they are already contemplating their course with their naval fleet when the war ends. The other time Germany surrendered its fleet to the Allies and, delivering it at Scapa Flow, scuttled the vessels.

A few days ago as Grand Admiral Karl Doenitz, top naval officer, announced the abandonment of Gdynia, Poland, he said in a speech to the U-boat personnel there:

"The war has reached the crisis point. We must face unflinchingly the possibility that Germany this time will be defeated again. But this time there will be no Scapa Flow. Never again will Germany hand over her great warships to the enemy. Our ships will either go down fighting or be scuttled. Every officer here must understand this."

It is estimated that the Nazis still have hundreds of U-boats of the midget type in the Baltic.

Premier Koiso says the Japs now face a situation which is regrettably unfavorable. Sort of a Pearl Harbor in reverse.

COMMUNICATION

Somewhere in France. Editor, The Courier:

Writing to let you know that it was a great surprise to me to meet my one time next-door neighbor, James S. Pine. We were so tickled that we had a good talk for hours. I lived next door to him for 25 years. He and I are in the best of health and we hope to keep that way until this thing is over with.

I only wish to God that I can see some more Bristol boys here. It sure does pep up your morale when you meet anyone that you know here. Will keep you informed if I meet any one else that lives in Bristol.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

point. No more money can be obtained that way—no, know, so little that it would not count much. Yet, the great bulk of the national income today is in the hands of the workers and a large part of it is exempt from taxation. Almost everybody in public office flinches from tackling this situation. Of course, every demagogue in both parties fiercely assails any effort to be practical about it, and the labor lobbyists howl murder at the mere suggestion of taxing anyone save the employer class.

ALSO, it is true that the public, generally, is more or less expectant of a lessening of the tax burden in the next year. How people get that way with the war still stretching indefinitely ahead and our gigantic debt growing by leaps and bounds, is not easy to say. But that is the way a lot of them are, and that makes it more certain that a Congress, with no Presidential encouragement to impose more taxes, is not going to do it. Accordingly, the limit will be raised with few dissenting voices, and raised again when that limit is reached. That process will continue so long as the war continues. When the war is over, perhaps a more realistic approach to this vital problem will be possible. It will have to be if chaos is to be averted. At the moment, practically all of our statements sheer away from the facts. They hate to face them because they might have to do something intensely disagreeable. Meanwhile it is not surprising that thoughtful men are asking whether the United States can carry a 500-billion-dollar debt—and if it can, what effect it will have upon our economy of the future. On this subject there are many views and little agreement.

APPROXIMATELY six billion dollars' annual interest is involved in a 500-billion-dollar debt. With civilian expenditures on the cost of a vastly larger peacetime army and navy than we ever had before, with public works, compensation for returned war veterans and an unprecedented pension load, all scheduled as certain, this six-billion interest will put the fixed costs of government after the war far higher than was ever dreamed of by anybody. To swing this debt to pay this interest, to keep the Government running and its financial structure from toppling is a task that calls for the best brains, character and courage in the country.

NEITHER its magnitude nor its importance can be exaggerated. Yet, not a great deal of thought is being given it by the men who will have to deal with it. There is more serious consideration outside Washington than in. Most economists and bankers appear to feel that if appropriate measures are taken, a 500-billion debt can be sustained without catastrophe. A plan for paying it off in 100 years was recently advanced by a business

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

That was a good, a golden summer. Matthew adjusted himself to living in the quiet apartment, working, seeing his mother at intervals. He was not lonely. It wasn't that he did not think of Irene or cease to miss her, but he was busy. There were always patients and invitations, and Sam and Bill with whom to talk to over the day's work. Bill married in July and went off on his honeymoon, the office was rather slack, and Matthew was able to drive up now and then for just a night and for almost every weekend. He played golf, swam in the pool, defeated Jimmy Treadway at tennis, lay on the terrace or beside the pool and toasted himself a pleasant brown.

Judith thought, watching him one day: This was a dreadful mistake. There was Matthew lying across the pool from her, his dark head on his arms, sleepy in the sun, on a hot Sunday in the late afternoon. Ella's weekend guests were rather on the tottering side, none swam. Mary had had her swim and gone for a walk with Lynn, also there for the weekend. Jimmy Treadway had come over for lunch, he and Judith had quarreled, and he had gone away in a minor rage, threatening never to see her again.

Matthew rolled over and squinted up at the blue bowl of the sky. Judith's bathing suit was white and she was bronzed against it as she looked at him, and could look safely because her glasses were dark green.

"All you need is a tin cup," he suggested; "take off the disguise."

She said, "I don't want to get wrinkles."

"So Jimmy won't love you with wrinkles? What kind of guy is he? I never heard so much horse talk in my life as at lunch. Why did you ask me up anyway? Lynn and mother had a picnic on the terrace. I don't like your boy friend as well as I thought I would."

"Just because you don't play polo—"

"I sit on the side lines and wait for the fractures."

She said, "Well, maybe Jimmy isn't interested in clinics."

"But he thinks it's an alimony jail."

Judith declared, "Just because you don't even ride—"

"I could," emphasized Matthew, and sat up, "and I'd be good too. I used to, you know. But I haven't time, my girl, for social graces."

He stood up, dove, swam across the pool and climbed up, dripping, beside her. "I'm tired of shouting at you," he complained and lay down beside her.

Judith moved away slightly, and Matthew asked indignantly, "What's the matter, afraid of getting your suit wet or have I some dread disease? By the way, that's a rather fetching little number, what there is of it. Talk about exposure—"

"Sorry," said Judith shortly. "You are not, put his hands up to shield his eyes and looked at her from underneath them. "You're a very good-looking infant," he observed; "who would have thought it years ago? A fright, you were then."

"Never," demurred Judith. "I always had style."

Matthew laughed. "Wonder if Mother and Lynn are back? She'll probably come home covered with poison ivy."

Judith said impulsively, "Isn't it a shame that you're married?"

"They? Who? What are you talking about?"

"Your mother and Lynn Mortimer."

"Of all the crazy ideas," he remarked and remembered that Irene had spoken of this to him, and how annoyed he had been.

Judith said crossly, "Oh, do grow up, Matthew! He's in love with her—isn't he?—and has been for years."

Matthew's mouth was a straight line. "Have you forgotten that he has an insane wife?"

"No, I haven't," answered Judith, and neither has he. At least that's the kind of man he is. But it's tragic. They're such good companions . . . and if anyone deserves a break, your mother does. And Mr. Mortimer too."

"A break?" He stared at her blankly. "She has everything in the world, her work, her friends, good times."

"And companionship?" asked Judith.

"I'm still around," declared Matthew.

Judith said after a pause, "Of course you are. But how about the companionship of a contemporary?" She clasped her hands around her knees. "Of a special one, a man she could love and with whom she could grow old happily."

He interrupted. "You don't think, you just talk."

Judith said, after a moment, "I feel older than you. You won't face things, will you? I don't care how much she loves you, Matthew, she needs more—"

"Sure, I know he's fond of her . . . and she of him. But, Judy, take my word for it. She's the type who loves one man . . . and marries him. And no other."

"Perhaps," murmured Judith. "You wouldn't know about that," asserted Matthew.

She took off her glasses and looked at him. Her very blue eyes blazed. "Wouldn't I?"

A servant came tottering down the lawn.

"Cocktails," deduced Matthew. "Well, I'd better swim first; if I drink I'll drown." He rose and pulled Judith to her feet. She asked, trying to free her hands, "Sore at me, Matthew?"

"No . . . yes, for a moment. Then I realized you are only a romantic child," he said, "so I wasn't any longer. How about getting that suit wet?"

"Matthew, don't!"

But he picked her up, and with no particular gentleness, flung her into the pool.

That night sitting at dinner with Lynn and his mother, Matthew found himself regarding them with an exasperated curiosity. Lucky, he thought, that I sort of grew up accepting Lynn, liking him better than any other man I ever knew, or I'd take a punch at him just in case.

But there wasn't any "in case." Knowing Lynn, knowing his mother, he couldn't think, even briefly, of a situation with a capital S. Something like compulsion stirred him for a moment. Sure, as he had told Judy, sure, he knew that Mortimer was fond of Mary Norman . . . you just took that for granted. But if he was really deeply in love with her?

Matthew was more than thirty, and a doctor. He knew it was perfectly possible for a man of Lynn Mortimer's age to be in love; and for a woman of his mother's age, as far as that went. He had seen more than one of them in his practice. Indian summer, second blooming, and bringing to love the mellow warmth of autumn sunlight and the flaming glory of the autumnal trees. He knew it. But these were other women; not his mother. His mother was different. His mother was unique, and apart. She belonged to the memory of his father and to him.

So, stirred, a very little, he looked tolerantly at Lynn Mortimer and thought: If it's true, well, poor devil . . .

Judy, confound her. Romantic little idiot. Treadway wasn't good enough for her, not even if you considered his undeniable good looks, and his gobs of money. Treadway was all brain and no brain, half horse. Centaur, that was Treadway. A girl of Judy's caliber would tire of him in a year. Moreover, she wasn't in love with him. You could tell that, said Matthew to himself, tinkling the ice in his glass.

"Good coffee," he commented. "Lord, I hate to go back to tea."

"Must you?" asked his mother. "Up and at it bright and early tomorrow morning, at the hospital," said Matthew. "There are some interesting cases on my service just now."

He expanded about them and they listened, Lynn with half his mind and Mary with interest and some distaste. Matthew was so graphic. "Matthew," Irene had said once, "goes in for dotting all the 'I's."

group. The security and happiness of every man, woman and child in the country is bound up in this problem. Failure to handle it successfully will invite disaster second only to losing the war. Nearly everybody concedes this to be true.

ASTY STUFFINGS HAT WILL IMPROVE TURKEY FLAVOR

Recipes Here For Oyster,
Celery, Rice, Apricot,
Other Favorites

American armed forces stationed overseas and in this country will have their turkey dinner on Thanksgiving and Christmas this year and New Year's Day. Turkeys sent to American fighting forces overseas have played an important role in the building and maintenance of morale ever since war began. They have been sent by ship, plane, truck, jeep, muleback and on back to battle fronts in every part of the world where our soldiers, sailors, marines and airmen are fighting.

In order that our soldiers and sailors, WACS, WAVES and other forces may have this one reminder of traditional holiday meals at home, loyal American civilians will gladly eat chicken or duck or other fowl this year if necessary. If lucky enough to get one, we shall all want turkey, of course. There will be turkeys available, but not as plentiful as in peacetime. As a matter of fact, because we have more forces overseas, the need for turkeys will be greater and the supply available for civilians will be somewhat smaller than a year ago, or about 3 pounds per capita. This is approximately 1/4 pound less than last year but larger than the average per capita consumption of 2.6 pounds in the pre-war years 1935-39.

Whether we have turkey, chicken, duck, goose or other fowl, it will not be complete without the stuffing.

The General Pattern

All poultry stuffings are built on the same general pattern. First, there is a starchy base: bread crumbs—white, brown or corn—or flaky boiled rice, or well-seasoned mashed potatoes. Second, melted butter or some other good flavored fat is added for richness. Then comes the seasoning. Among the herbs savory, sweet marjoram, thyme and sage are favorites. There are also the seasoning vegetables—celery, parsley and onion. Other interesting additions to stuffing are nuts, oysters, mushrooms, dried apricots or prunes, raisins, sausage, diced salt pork fried crisp, and tart apple cubes candied with sugar.

Stuffings are either dryish, that is, made of medium-dry crumbs

without milk or water, or they are of the moist type built on a foundation of rice, potatoes, apples or of bread crumbs with added liquid. To make good crumbs for the dryish type of stuffing, use medium-dry bread—2 or 3 days old. Cut each loaf in two and "fork" out the inside, leaving the crusts. Pick the pieces of bread apart with the tips of the fingers, until all the crumbs are fine and are even in size. If crumbs are prepared in advance of using, keep them in a covered container in a cold place.

Guide to Quantities

In making stuffings there are no hard and fast rules. As a starting point, however, the following are good proportions: 1 cup of crumbs or boiled rice; 1 to 1 1/2 tablespoons of fat—depending on how much natural fat the bird contains; about 1/4 cup of chopped celery and parsley; a very little onion; seasoning herbs to taste—always in moderation, just enough for bouquet. Suit the amount of onions and the herb seasonings to the other ingredients, toning them down when delicately flavored oysters or mushrooms are among the ingredients.

In planning a stuffing, figure the quantity of starchy base from the dressed weight of the bird. For every pound of bird, count 1 cup of crumbs; then, if the bird weighs 10 pounds or less, subtract 1 cup from the total; if the bird weighs more than 10 pounds subtract 2 cups from the total. For example, allow 4 cups of crumbs for a chicken that weighs 5 pounds dressed and 12 cups of crumbs for a turkey weighing 14 pounds dressed. Ordinarily a 1-pound loaf of white bread 2 or 3 days old makes about 4 cups, or 1 quart, of light fluffy crumbs without crusts. Since rice stuffing swells considerably, use 1 cup less of boiled rice than of bread crumbs in any recipe.

In the following recipes, quantities are given according to birds of a certain weight. Each stuffing may be used with birds of different sizes and kinds, but quantities must be adjusted accordingly.

Savory Stuffing

3/4 cup butter or other fat
1 pint chopped celery
1/2 cup chopped parsley
1 small onion, chopped
2 to 2 1/2 quarts bread crumbs
1 to 2 tsp. savory seasoning
1 to 2 tsp. salt

Pepper to taste.
In the melted fat cook the celery, parsley and onion for a few minutes. Add to the bread crumbs and dry seasonings and stir all together.

If desired, add nuts—chestnuts, hazelnuts, or filberts, pecans, pine nuts, or blanched almonds. To prepare chestnuts, boil them in water to cover for 15 minutes, and peel off the shells and brown skin with a sharp knife while the nuts are still hot.

Oyster Stuffing

(10 to 12-pound goose)
1 1/2 pints oysters
3/4 cup butter or other fat
1/2 cup chopped parsley
1 tsp. chopped onion
2 to 2 1/2 quarts bread crumbs
1/2 teaspoon savory seasoning
1/4 tsp. celery seed
1 to 2 tsp. salt

Heat the oysters gently for a few minutes; then drain off all the liquor. In the melted fat, cook the parsley and onion for a few minutes, then add these ingredients and the drained oysters to the bread crumbs and dry seasonings.

Celery Stuffing

(10 to 12-pound goose)
1/2 cup butter or other fat
1 cup chopped parsley
1 cup chopped onion
2 quarts bread crumbs
1 quart chopped celery (mixed stalks and tops)
1 tsp. celery seed
1/2 tsp. savory seasoning
1 to 2 tsp. salt
Pepper to taste.

Experience is the Best Teacher

In planning for the future, Philadelphia Electric draws heavily upon the skill and experience of employees who have been serving the company for years. The two men shown above are typical of many on P.E. rolls. More than 74% of all P.E. employees have been with us at least 10 years; 16% for 25 years or more.

Magazines and newspapers have been filled with stories of "miracle-working gadgets" to come in the postwar days.

Frankly, we don't know anything about instruments to think for you, help you to read other people's minds or to see through stone walls. But in the world of electricity, wartime research has developed many improvements that are ready now to go into production as soon as materials are available.

For instance, home lighting. Advanced knowledge will bring a new peak of perfection. Study and experiments have established different lighting levels for different needs; varied quantities of illumination; fluorescent lighting where it is helpful—in short, scientifically right illumination for each room.

The ways of doing this are ready right now . . . and no doubt will lead to further improvements, probably even the so-called "invisible lighting" expected to pour from hidden recesses in the walls.

All of which points to the new importance of electricity; new uses for it.

To be sure this five-county area has all the power necessary to enjoy this better way of living, Philadelphia Electric began advance planning long ago. Just one item—$13,000,000 for transmission lines, transformers, etc., within the next five years—indicates the thoroughness of our preparation to have the electricity you need, where you need it. Many other expansions also are under way, or are about to start.

BRISTOL AND MORRISVILLE HIGH SCHOOL ELEVENS MEET IN ANNUAL "TURKEYLESS" DAY BATTLE ON LOCAL FIELD TOMORROW; BOTH TEAMS ARE CONFIDENT

Tomorrow Is Their Last Game For Bristol High

Back Row—Fiorelli, Nyse, McDevitt, Parrell, Oriola

The above seniors will play their last football game for Bristol High tomorrow morning at 10:30 a. m., when they meet Morrisville High School, on the Bristol High School field.

Both teams undefeated in league competition, Bristol and Morrisville will hold their 17th meeting tomorrow morning on the local gridiron. Opening kickoff will take place at 10:30 o'clock, sharp.

The Bunnies and the Bulldogs have both scored triumphs over Bensalem and Langhorne, the other pair of teams in the Lower Bucks County circuit. Morrisville is the defending champion, having won the crown two seasons in a row.

On paper, the Bunnies appear to have the edge on their Morrisville rivals, according to comparative scores. Morrisville won over both Langhorne and P. S. D. in the last quarter of the game, while the boys of Coach Harold Stackhouse did not have much difficulty with these schools.

Also, Morrisville barely beat out the Riverside team and Bristol swamped the Jerseyites. Both clubs lost to Burlington, although the Bristol team outplayed their across-the-river rivals.

But scores mean nothing to the two teams who are always at their best on Thanksgiving Day morning, and the result will most likely be another close score, with either team coming through with fine plays to cop the verdict. The condition of the playing field may also have something to do with the outcome of the verdict, as the Bulldogs are noted for their powerful line plays, while the Bristol boys have running plays which will be bogged down on a muddy field.

Coach "Johnny" Hoffman, of the Bulldogs, will be without the services of two of his regulars. "Jimmy" Harms, flashy fullback, was injured early in the season and hasn't played since, and two weeks ago Harry Zack broke his arm and will also be out. The Morrisville coach had shifted Summers from a backfield post to center, but the injury to Zack may force him to again place Summers in the backfield.

Cummings and Baehr are now the mainstays of the Morrisville backfield and must be stopped. Banks will be used at quarterback with the line being composed of Wolf, Farkas, Marucci, Boodley, Moser and Baehr.

Coach Stackhouse's lineup is intact and he will start McDevitt, Parrell, Oriola and Fiorelli in the backfield, with the line being made up of Favoroso, Lelinski, Centonze, Mandio, Costantini, Feele and Keyes.

Rev. Nekirk said that the school children had distributed the folders prior to the canvases. He said their success this year was due to more canvassers and the fact that they were better organized.

Mess Sgt. Cook of the U. S. Infantry, who lost the sight of one eye, and was wounded in the arm in the Saipan invasion, said at the meeting that his jungle training was the nearest thing to fighting the Japs as it really was. This training, he said, saved many American lives.

Sgt. Cook was in one group of U. S. Infantry troops that was surrounded by the Japs on Saipan and nearly wiped out. The Japs, in a suicide attempt, in desperation and close fighting, forced his unit to withdraw to the sea.

He was sent to a field hospital at New Caledonia where he commented on the U. S. O. and how it kept up the morale of the boys. He said that he missed seeing Bob Hope's show, while there, as he was confined to his bed. He was disappointed at not seeing Bob Hope because he said he was one of the best morale builders in the South Pacific.

On October 6, 1944, Sgt. Cook returned to California, where he enjoyed himself for a short while and visited three U. S. O.'s in Hollywood and also had the privilege of seeing many actors and actresses. He said that the U. S. O.'s there would find civilian homes for the boys to spend the night if there were none available in their dormitories.

Sgt. Cook was sent from California to the Valley Forge General Hospital where he states that he receives excellent care.

Those who were at the speakers' table included: Hon. Hiram Keller, chairman; Judge Calvin S. Boyer; A. A. Danzer and William Notter, vice-chairmen; Sgt. Cook; Colonel Churchill Williams; Mrs. Fritz and Mrs. Anderson of the Phoenixville Red Cross, who so kindly volunteered to drive Sgt. Cook to the meeting; Leonard Halderman, of the Doylestown area and with the highest

Judge Hiram Keller Addresses Rotarians

In the juvenile court of Bucks County is made public.

"The problem is nothing new, but during the past four or five years there has been a great increase. Last year there were about 225 such cases in the county courts. This number, plus the number of neglected children, about 400 this year, cost the county about $50,000. In a county of 107,000 population it seems high, but the county is so near large cities that that is why it is higher than it otherwise would be.

"The war is not wholly to blame, but the home, church, school and community, because they failed in normal times to provide real programs for the children. The main cause is broken homes. From year to year the age of criminals is getting lower. The greatest number is in the 17 year old group."

Judge Keller said that one of the ways all can help to lessen this problem is by making conditions in the individual home favorable, providing proper recreational facilities in the community, and teaching the children to go to Sunday School and church.

A letter from Kimbel Faust, with the Army medical corps in China, was read, greetings being sent to the Rotarians.

A motion picture on the production of penicillin was shown by Elwood J. Rittenhouse, Jr., of Trevoise, a guest at the meeting. This proved very interesting and educational. Other guests were Manoah R. Reiter, Morrisville club; and Raymond W. Hoxworth, of Doylestown.

SLASHING ATTACK
PROMISES TO CRACK
RHINE DEFENSES

First French Army Captures Mulhouse, West of River Rhine

S A GARRISON CITY

City Has Peacetime Population of 100,000 and Extensive Fortifications

By International News Service
PARIS, Nov. 22—In a slashing attack that promises to crack all German defenses on the upper Rhine, troops of the French First Army today captured Mulhouse, great Maginot line garrison city just west of the river Rhine.

Mulhouse, southern terminus of an important railway line linking Strasbourg, is the first major city of the Rhine Valley to be taken by the Allies.

It has a normal peacetime population of about 100,000 and extensive fortifications.

Exploiting his spectacular drive through the Belfort Gap, Gen. Marie Emil Bethouart, commander of the French First Army, pushed his forces into Mulhouse in the face of violent German counter-attacks in the region south of Danne-Marie.

Hard street fighting was under way in the city of Belfort itself, but the town's fall was imminent.

Mulhouse is one of the key cities of Lorraine incorporated into Nazi Germany by Adolf Hitler within a few weeks after his defeat of France in 1940.

It had been under German control during the period between the Franco-Prussian war and defeat of imperial Germany in the last conflict. As a key point of military importance on the historic route of conquest between France and Germany, it had been fortified continually through the centuries.

Headquarters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower meanwhile reported savage battles at many points along the western front and severe resistance encountered in most areas.

(By International News Service)

METZ FALLS TO ALLIES

Paris—Two great co-ordinated American-French drives unbuckled virtually the entire southern sector of the German defense line today by overrunning the great Maginot line bastion of Mulhouse, just west of the Rhine, and capturing the historic city of Metz.

Mud-caked doughboys of Lt. Gen. George S. Patton's Third Army completed the capture of Metz, wiping out the last nest of German resistance. A front-line INS dispatch reported the capture of the city, and apparently German garrisons on the two hold-out islands in the Moselle capitulated, an example presumably followed by the last remaining fortresses which already were cut off and useless.

GERMANS TRY TO THWART ALLIED PINCERS MOVE

Rome—While American Fifth Army troops countered German attacks in the vicinity of Monte Grande and northeast of Monte Belmont, British Eighth Army forces slugged forward today through German regiments trying to thwart an Allied pincer movement against the city of Bologna. The British Tommies rolled to the banks of the river Cosina after seizing the important village of Castiglione while Polish troops on their left flank recaptured Monte Fortino and slashed their way more than a mile to take the strategic heights of Monte Palano.

The British thrust toward Bologna was within only three miles of the vital city of Faenza, near the Italian east coast.

Raising The Ceiling

Washington, Nov. 21. ONE of the first things the new Congress will have to do early next year is to extend again the national debt limit. Last May an extension from $210,000,000,000 to $240,000,000,000 was made, practically without debate and by a voice vote. Before April it is expected the request of the Treasury will be for fixing a new limit at the incredible figure of $300,000,000,000.

CONGRESS will not like to make this extension. It did not like it last time, but it made it then and it will make it again. For there is but one alternative—to wit, the imposition of greatly increased taxes on the very large low-income groups, either through a general sales tax or heavier income taxes, or both. The only way to decrease borrowing is to increase taxes. To increase taxes on the masses of the people just ahead of an election takes more courage than any Congress yet has shown, and when the debt ceiling was last raised, six months ago, the question of increasing taxes was not seriously considered.

THE CHANCES are that not much more consideration will be given this time, though the need is greater and the fiscal situation more critical. But it is unreasonable to expect Congress to raise taxes by itself without White House support or Executive leadership. And it will not. On the contrary, both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Morgenthau are expected to continue their opposition to the sales tax and their attitude is a reflection of the labor lobbies, particularly the CIO. Under such circumstances, further general taxation will not be imposed by Congress. For one thing, it would have to act against the White House weight instead of with it; second, it is an unpopular thing to do under any circumstances and every Congress is reluctant to tax the low-income voters.

SOAKING the rich is one thing, but taxing the "workers" is another. The trouble now is that the rich are taxed clear to the saturation point just ahead of an election

SOLICIT DONATIONS OF X'MAS GIFT BOXES FOR SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN IN HOSPITALS IN THE UNITED STATES; LEAVE AT LEGION HOME

The National Headquarters of the American Legion has approved a plan whereby donations of gift boxes for service men and women in hospitals in the United States can be delivered to American Legion Posts and Legion Auxiliaries headquarters here.

The public is asked to cooperate in the plan and such gifts can be left at the Bracken Post Home prior to the holiday period. The shipment of packages to hospitals will be taken care of by the Legion and the Auxiliary of Bracken Post in this area.

Mrs. Earl McEuen, president of Bracken Post Auxiliary, is supervising the activity here.

It is permissible for each donor of gift boxes to place a personal card in the box should they so desire. Many individuals may desire to be thus personally identified as a donor of a box whereby the serviceman or woman recipient can properly acknowledge the present after Christmas.

These packages will be distributed promptly before Christmas and will make men and women in the hospitals happy at the Christmas season.

To the People of this Community

Thanksgiving Day is essentially a day for spiritual reflection. It would be out of keeping with the significance of this holiday to discuss War Bonds in the light of $4 for every $3 invested by an individual in this war-born security. What, then, is there about the purchase of extra War Bonds in this Sixth War Loan to merit editorial link with Thanksgiving Day?

The very origin of the observance gives you the answer. Thanksgiving Day was born from the desire to acknowledge Divine aid for the blessings of the year, for the plentiful harvest, for the opportunity for families to reassemble under one roof, for America, land of liberty and opportunity.

Thanksgiving Day, 1944, is a day of war, a day of family separation, a day of dying for many Americans in foreign lands. You are fighting a war to destroy barbarians who would enslave you and make Thanksgiving Days a mockery forever after. Without the money you are lending your government to fight those enemies, night would fall on you. Your country cannot get along without your War Bond purchases. You can make these Thanksgiving Days a true American family day with the help of God and your savings in War Bonds.

County Workers Meet and Report on Progress of The Drive

Twenty districts in Bucks county have reported that they have met the National War Fund quota, and most of them have gone over the top. At a special luncheon of county-wide leaders in Doylestown on Monday, Raymond Gilbert reported that Northampton Township had achieved 157% of its quota. Other reports are as follows: Rev. Neikirk, Tinicum, 156%; Eldon Sowers, Lower Makefield, 121%; Rev. Neikirk, Riegelsville, 133%; Marie Kelly, Yardley, 122%; Simon Moyer, Silverdale, 119%; Dr. A. Strathie, Wrightstown, 114%; Webster Shive, Nockamixon, 109%; Mrs. John Flood and Mrs. Blonheim, New Hope-Selsbury, and Upper Makefield, 102%; Alfred Redland, Morrisville, 106%; Lester Trauger, Telford, 103%; A. Mitman, Sellersville, 103%; T. Wells Knipe, Perkasie, 102%; Lester Trauger, East Rockhill and West Rockhill, 100%; Simon Moyer, Bedminster, 100%; Rev. Neikirk, Bridgeton, 101%; and Durham, 100%; Sara Massinger, Chalfont, 100%.

F. Eugene Klinger, of Upper Southampton, has 95% of his quota and may still go over the top.

The three areas whose sections have done outstanding work are: William Notter for Sellersville-Perkasie area; Rev. Neikirk, for Riegelsville; and A. A. Daner, for the Yardley-Morrisville area.

Single reports indicate that the county will realize $15,000 to $24,000 more than in 1943. Much depends upon Langhorne, Bristol, and Bensalem areas. Bristol area is lagging far behind in reaching its quota.

Vice-Chairman William Notter reported that he had received complete co-operation from all industries in the Sellersville-Perkasie area and that all the quotas in that section have been met with more yet to be heard from.

A. A. Daner, another vice-chairman, said that in the current drive, the Morrisville-Yardley sections had received unusual co-operation from its residents, although nearly all of them work outside of the county.

Leonard Haldeman attributed Doylestown's unusual success of over $6500 to the work of 50 solicitors.

WHAT OUR BOYS

WIN THE WAR

A U. S. TROOP CARRIER BASE, European Theatre of Operations, Nov. 22—Flight Officer Eddie C. Allen, son of Mrs. Mamie Allen, of Bristol, Pa., has been awarded an "Oak Leaf Cluster" to his Air Medal for his "outstanding achievements" in a combat glider mission into Holland.

Flight Officer Allen related: "The Germans had our landing area zeroed with 88's, infantry, panzer units, and paratroopers, tearing and ripping my glider and flak was flying all around like a terrible hailstorm in mid-summer-time. However the Dutch with the patter of their wooden shoes and the waving of their flags presented a picture that I will never forget."

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1944

THANKSGIVING

The day is properly appointed by law and by custom for the returning of thanks to God for the increase of the earth. The season was bountiful. The people find themselves rich in food. They are so bountifully blessed that they are able to share the fruits of their labors and husbandry with peoples whose hands lie seared and intended in the wake of wars.

The people are thankful for strength in this hour of peril! In this strength they stand firm, unafraid and resolute. They are undismayed by the quickness of the tyrant's wrath or the fierceness of his greed. They know that the God which has so generously rewarded their toil and lighted the way for them to greatness of achievement looks only with sadness upon the tyrant's denial of religion and surrender to lust for the loot of materialism.

The people are thankful for the victories being achieved by the forces of right everywhere. In looking the world over for the peace in which all men of good will rejoice, the people are disappointed, for they find no peace. But they find in all enlightened men the more precious attribute of the heart—the desire for peace. Were it not so, men would submit to the tyrant and give themselves to a life of dread and suffering in which there is no peace. But they want peace. They so yearn and pray for it that they willingly give their lives that it may be brought back to earth.

To these men this country has pledged its all. It is thankful that it has much to give, that it sees the right, that it has the spirit to act and the will to make sure that freedom does not perish from the earth. Of such is its greatness, a greatness for which it owes and gives a full measure of thanks.

NAZI FLEET

So desperate are the prospects facing the Nazi warlords that they are already contemplating their course with their naval fleet when the war ends. The other time Germany surrendered its fleet to the Allies and, delivering it at Scapa Flow, scuttled the vessels.

A few days ago as Grand Admiral Karl Doenitz, top naval officer, announced the abandonment of Gdynia, Poland, he said in a speech to the U-boat personnel there:

"The war has reached the crisis point. We must face unflinchingly the possibility that Germany this time will be defeated again. But this time there will be no Scapa Flow. Never again will Germany hand over her great warships to the enemy. Our ships will either go down fighting or be scuttled. Every officer here must understand this."

It is estimated that the Nazis still have hundreds of U-boats of the midget type in the Baltic.

Premier Koiso says the Japs now face a situation which is regretably unfavorable. Sort of a Pearl Harbor in reverse.

Editor, The Courier:
Writing to let you know that it was a great surprise to me to meet my one time next-door neighbor, James S. Fine. We were so tickled that we had a good talk for hours.

I lived next door to him for 25 years. He and I are in the best of health and we hope to keep that way until this thing is over with.

I only wish to God that I can see some more Bristol boys here. It sure does pep up your morale when you meet anyone that you know here. Will keep you informed if I meet any one else that lives in Bristol.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

point. No more money can be obtained that way—or, anyhow, so little that it would not count much. Yet, the great bulk of the national income today is in the hands of the workers and a large part of it is exacted from taxation. Almost everybody in public office flinches from tackling this situation. Of course, every demagogue in both parties ferociously assails any effort to be practical about it, and the labor lobbyists howl murder at the mere suggestion of taxing anyone save the employer class.

Also, it is true that the public, generally, is more or less expectant of a lessening of the tax burden in the next year. How people get that way with the war still stretching indefinitely ahead and our strange debt growing by leaps and bounds, is not easy to say. But that is the way a lot of them are and that makes it more certain that a Congress, with no Presidential encouragement to impose more taxes, is not going to do it. Accordingly, the limit will be raised with few dissenting voices—and raised again when that limit is reached. That process will continue so long as the war continues. When the war is over, perhaps a more realistic approach to this vital problem will be possible. It will have to be if chaos is to be averted. At the moment, practically all of our statements sheer away from the facts. They want to face them because they might have to do something intensely disagreeable. Meanwhile it is not surprising that thoughtful men are asking whether the United States can carry a 360-billion-dollar debt—and if it can, what effect it will have upon our economy of the future. On this subject there are many views and little agreement.

APPROXIMATELY six billion dollars' annual interest is involved in a 360-billion-dollar debt. With civilian expenditures on the cost of a vastly larger peacetime army and navy than we ever had before, with public works, compensation for returned war veterans and an unprecedented pension load, all scheduled to wait until this six-billion interest is paid, the fixed costs of government after the war for higher than was ever dreamed of by anybody. To swing this debt, to pay this interest, to keep the Government running and its financial structure from toppling, is a task that calls for the best brains, character and courage in the country.

NEITHER its magnitude nor its importance can be exaggerated. Yet, not a great deal of thought is being given it by the men who will have to deal with it. There is more serious consideration outside Washington than in. Many economists and bankers appear to feel that if appropriate measures are taken, a 360-billion debt can be sustained without catastrophe. A plan for paying it off in 100 years was recently advanced by a business

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

The pink stucco house was a nightmare. It looked as if it had been constructed from straw-berry ice. It had turrets, pinnacles and terraces. It was huge, ostentatious, and comfortable.

But the cottage was something else again. A remodeled salt-box, white with green shutters, set in an old-fashioned garden now teeming with spring and color. Against the panes of the windows which would be Matthew's, apple blossoms knocked with their rosy, tiny fists. There were birds and green lawns.

Matthew observed, looking into the vast depths of the empty pool, "Boy, this will be something!"

Judith stood on the edge of the pool and regarded him. She wore tweeds, and no hat. Her hands were jammed in her pockets. Her hair was bright in the spring sunshine, and her lips were scarlet. She was slender and was (Matthew saw) much smaller than he had thought. . . . because, usually, he decided, she wears high heels.

"What are you thinking about, shrimp?" Matthew inquired.

"Shrimp!" she said indignantly. Then she laughed. "Nothing. Just wondering if you like it up here."

"I sure do. Not that I'll be able to be here half enough. . . . Mother has it all planned." He indicated Mary walking through the garden toward them. "I'm to have Nellie and the apartment; she will bring Kate up here. I'll lend her Nellie when there are guests; providing I can spare her. And I'll get up whenever I can."

"Good," said Judith.

Matthew all but choked. "So Old Uncle will be available for consultation if you are bee-stung or sprain an ankle or have been trampled. I expect you'll have plenty of that. The Treadways live up here somewhere, don't they?" he asked, grinning.

"Do," she said crossly, "wipe that disgusting smirk off your face, it isn't at all becoming. Yes, they do, about ten miles away and, if you think this place is Early Hollywood, you ought to see theirs."

Mary waved to them and they walked toward her.

"You might do worse," said Matthew. "I'm a practical man, you know. I rather liked your Jimmy, the little I saw of him."

"He isn't mine,"

"He could be," rejoined Matthew. "Nothing much above the neck, of course. . . . but you have brains enough for two."

"What's all this?" queried Mary. "Judith looks like an impending storm."

Judith said, "Matthew's been advising me to marry Jimmy Treadway."

"I'm not marrying anybody," came the prompt reply.

"A heck," remarked Matthew happily. "For some poor guy." He accelerated and they shot away.

"Well," he said, "that's that. And as far as I'm concerned, it's a deal."

"Who?" asked his mother, bewildered, "what?"

"The house, angel," he shouted back. "Did you think I was talking about Judy and her polo player?"

"I wouldn't know, dear," said Mary, resigned.

Then Matthew declared, "I won't let Judy sacrifice herself to millions. What she needs is a poor man about twenty years her senior who will beat her on alternate Tuesdays."

Judith thought: What I need is you, Matthew. I could kill, I could slap you. I could . . . I could love you all my life, she thought sorrowfully, all my life.

And it would be, barring accidents, a long life. She was young enough to think of it as interminable because without him it would be so empty.

Summer came suddenly, and those who could fled from unseasonably melting asphalt and sultry, sticky nights. Mary set her town apartment in order, putting away all the dust catchers which look so hot in summer. She installed Venetian blinds, cool chintzes, and Nellie to look after Matthew. He would be all right, she could talk to him every day, she would come into town occasionally, and perhaps when his patients went away for their holidays he would be more free to come to her.

One thing troubled her and she told him so shortly before she moved to Greenwich. "It's just that I shall worry because you'll be all alone. . . . I forgot that, in my excitement over the cottage."

He patted her shoulder. "I'll be all right," he assured his mother. Matthew had been so little alone, she reflected. He moved away from her and knocked his pipe against the edge of the mantel. "Don't worry," he added over his shoulder. "I'll be busy—I hope—but not too busy to come up to the country."

So it was all right, and she would move to the cozy Connecticut salt-box, sit in her garden and have tea on the terrace, and a swim in the pool when she felt she wasn't intruding on Ella's guests, and Judith would run in and out.

Mary thought, as Lynn drove her to Greenwich in the green and pearl of a summer evening. I hope it's going to be a good summer.

"What are you thinking about, Mary?"

"I was thinking that I hope it will be a good summer."

"There's no reason why it won't. You'll ask me for a weekend now and then," he urged. "When Matthew's able to come? And evenings, sometimes, I may drive up to see you?"

"Of course. There is no time when you won't be welcome," she said gently. "I think you'll like it. My part of it anyway. Ella's something else again. Did I tell you the place is called Villa Capri? It's incredible!"

Lynn said, "I'm glad you're going to be out of town. Especially if we're in for a hot summer."

"I fretted about leaving Matthew alone. But he assured me he'll be all right."

Lynn remarked quietly, "Some day he has to grow up, Mary."

Mary was silent. He knew she was hurt. He added, "I am not fault-finding, or critical. I'm as fond of Matthew as if he were my own son." He was quiet for a minute, thinking of all that implied, feeling his personal tragedy leaden in his heart. His son and Mary's. It had not been, it was not to be, it could never be. "But as he is not my son," he went on, "I can view him with some detachment."

She said sturdily, "Matthew's a very fine person."

"I don't deny it, my dear. I admire him very much. But . . . you—and Irene too—you haven't permitted him to stand on his own feet emotionally."

Mary protested, "I don't know what you mean. He's always made his own decisions. He decided he wanted to be a doctor and stuck to it. His marriage," she added, "was of his own choosing."

"Naturally," soothed Lynn. "But it so happens that you could back him up in his every decision, couldn't you? He's never run coun- tel to you. And why? Because you naturally assume that everything he does is right. He's a grand person."

"What does he lack?"

"I haven't a name for it," parried Lynn, "and please don't be angry with me."

"He isn't perfect. I never said he was perfect," she said hotly.

"Of course not."

"What is it you think he lacks?" she persisted.

"Perhaps," he said quietly, "it is . . . heart."

"Heart?" she repeated indignantly. "He's the best, the kindest—"

"Soul!" Lynn interrupted. "Or let us say, he keeps a little iron in his soul? Things have been made very easy for him, Mary."

She asked, "You can say that after what happened to his marriage?"

"I wasn't thinking of his marriage." He took one hand from the wheel and patted hers as they lay in her lap. "Let's talk about something else. You know I love Matthew," he added, "you know I love you."

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

That was a good, a golden summer. Matthew adjusted himself to living in the quiet apartment, working, seeing his mother at intervals. He was not lonely. It wasn't that he did not think of Irene or cease to miss her, but he was busy. There were always patients and invitations, and Sam and Bill with whom to talk to over the day's work.

Bill married in July and went off on his honeymoon, the office was rather slack, and Matthew was able to drive up now and then for just a night and for almost every weekend. He played golf, swam in the pool, defeated Jimmy Treadway at tennis, lay on the terrace or beside the pool and toasted himself a pleasant brown.

Judith thought, watching him one day: This was a dreadful mistake.

There was Matthew lying across the pool from her, his dark head on his arms, sleepy in the sun, on a hot Sunday in the late afternoon. Ella's weekend guests were rather on the tottering side, none swam. Mary had had her swim and gone for a walk with Lynn, also there for the weekend. Jimmy Treadway had come over for lunch, he and Judith had quarreled, and he had gone away in a minor rage, threatening never to see her again.

Matthew rolled over and squinted up at the blue bowl of the sky.

Judith's bathing suit was white and she was bronze against it as she looked at him, and could look safely because her glasses were dark green.

"All you need is a tin cup," he suggested; "take off the disguise."

She said, "I don't want to get wrinkles."

"So Jimmy won't love you with wrinkles? What kind of guy is he? I never heard so much horse talk in my life as at lunch. Why did you ask me up anyway? Lynn and mother had a picnic on the terrace. I don't like your boy friend as well as I thought I would."

"Just because you don't play polo—"

"I sit on the side lines and wait for the fractures."

She said, "Well, maybe Jimmy isn't interested in clinics."

"But he thinks it's an alimony jail."

Judith declared, "Just because you don't even ride—"

"I could," emphasized Matthew, and sat up, "and I'd be good too. I used to, you know. But I haven't time, my girl, for social graces."

He stood up, dove, swam across the pool and climbed up, dripping, beside her. "I'm tired of shouting at you," he complained and lay down beside her.

Judith moved away slightly, and Matthew asked indignantly, "What's the matter, afraid of getting your suit wet or have I some dread disease? By the way, that's a rather fetching little number, what there is of it. Talk about exposure."

"Sorry," said Judith shortly.

"You are not." He rolled over on his back, put his hands up to shield his eyes and looked at her from underneath them. "You're a very good-looking infant," he observed; "who would have thought it years ago? A fright, you were then."

"Never," demurred Judith. "I always had style."

Matthew laughed. "Wonder if Mother and Lynn are back? She'll probably come home covered with poison ivy."

Judith said impulsively, "Isn't it a shame they can't be married?"

"They? Who? What are you talking about?"

"Your mother and Lynn Mortimer."

"Of all the crazy ideas," he remarked and remembered that Irene had spoken of this to him, and how annoyed he had been.

Judith said crossly, "Oh, do grow up, Matthew! He's in love with her— isn't he?—and has been for years."

Matthew's mouth was a straight line. "Have you forgotten that he has an insane wife?"

"No, I haven't," answered Judith, and neither has he. At least that's the kind of man he is. But it's tragic. They're such good companions. . . . and if anyone deserves a break, your mother does. And Mr. Mortimer too."

"A break?" He stared at her blankly. "She has everything in the world, her work, her friends, good times."

"And companionship?" asked Judith.

"I'm still around," declared Matthew.

Judith said after a pause, "Of course you are. But how about the companionship of a contemporary?" She clasped her hands around her knees. "Of a special one, a man she could love and with whom she could grow old happily."

ASTY STUFFINGS HAT WILL IMPROVE TURKEY FLAVOR

Recipes Here For Oyster,
Celery, Rice, Apricot,
Other Favorites

American armed forces stationed overseas and in this country will have their turkey dinner on Thanksgiving and Christmas this year and New Year's Day. Turkeys sent to American fighting forces overseas have played an important role in the building and maintenance of morale ever since war began. They have been sent by ship, plane, truck, jeep, muleback and on foot to battle fronts in every part of the world where our soldiers, sailors, marines and airmen are fighting.

In order that our soldiers and sailors, WACs, WAVES and other forces may have this one reminder of traditional holiday meals at home, loyal American civilians will gladly eat chicken or duck or other fowl this year if necessary. It is lucky enough to get one, we shall all want turkey, of course. There will be turkeys available, but not as plentiful as in peacetime. As a matter of fact, because we have more forces overseas, the need for turkeys will be greater and the supply available for civilians will be somewhat smaller than a year ago, or about 3 pounds per capita. This is approximately $\frac{1}{4}$ pound less than last year but larger than the average per capita consumption of 2.6 pounds in the pre-war years 1935-39.

Whether we have turkey, chicken, duck, goose or other fowl, it will not be complete without the stuffing.

The General Pattern

All poultry stuffings are built on the same general pattern. First, there is a starchy base: bread crumbs—white, brown or corn—or flaky boiled rice, or well-seasoned mashed potatoes. Second, melted fat is added for richness. Then comes the seasoning. Among the herbs savory, sweet marjoram, thyme and sage are favorites. There are also the seasoning vegetables—celery, parsley and onion. Other interesting additions to stuffing are nuts, oysters, mushrooms, dried apricots or prunes, raisins, sausage, diced salt pork fried crisp, and tart apple cubes candied with sugar.

Stuffings are either dryish, that is, made of medium-dry crumbs

without milk or water, or they are of the moist type built on a foundation of rice, potatoes, apples or of bread crumbs with added liquid.

To make good crumbs for the dryish type of stuffing, use medium-dry bread—2 or 3 days old. Cut each loaf in two and "fork" out the inside, leaving the crusts. Pick the pieces of bread apart with the tips of the fingers, until all the crumbs are fine and are even in size. If crumbs are prepared in advance of using, keep them in a covered container in a cold place.

Guide to Quantities

In making stuffings there are no hard and fast rules. As a starting point, however, the following are good proportions: 1 cup of crumbs or boiled rice; 1 to $1\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons of fat—depending on how much natural fat the bird contains; about $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of chopped celery and parsley; a very little onion; seasoning herbs to taste—always in moderation, just enough for bouquet. Suit the amount of onions and the herb seasonings to the other ingredients, toning them down when delicately flavored oysters or mushrooms are among the ingredients.

In planning a stuffing, figure the quantity of starchy base from the dressed weight of the bird. For every pound of bird, count 1 cup of crumbs; then, if the bird weighs 10 pounds or less, subtract 1 cup from the total; if the bird weighs more than 10 pounds subtract 2 cups from the total. For example, allow 4 cups of crumbs for a chicken that weighs 5 pounds dressed and 12 cups of crumbs for a turkey weighing 14 pounds dressed. Ordinarily a 1-pound loaf of white bread 2 or 3 days old makes about 4 cups, or 1 quart, of light fluffy crumbs without crusts. Since rice stuffing swells considerably, use 1 cup less of boiled rice than of bread crumbs in any recipe.

In the following recipes, quantities are given according to birds of a certain weight. Each stuffing may be used with birds of different sizes and kinds, but quantities must be adjusted accordingly.

Savory Stuffing

$\frac{3}{4}$ cup butter or other fat
1 pint chopped celery
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped parsley
1 small onion, chopped
2 to 2½ quarts bread crumbs
1 to 2 tsp. savory seasoning
1 to 2 tsp. salt

Pepper to taste.
In the melted fat cook the celery, parsley and onion for a few minutes. Add to the bread crumbs and dry seasonings and stir all together.

If desired, add nuts—chestnuts, hazelnuts, or filberts, pecans, pine nuts, or blanched almonds. To prepare chestnuts, boil them in water to cover for 15 minutes, and peel off the shells and brown skin with a sharp knife while the nuts are still hot.

Oyster Stuffing

(10 to 12-pound turkey)
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ pints oysters
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup butter or other fat
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped parsley
1 tsp. chopped onion
2 to 2½ quarts bread crumbs
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon savory seasoning
 $\frac{1}{4}$ tsp. celery seed
1 to 2 tsp. salt

Heat the oysters gently for 3 few minutes; then drain off all the liquor. In the melted fat, cook the parsley and onion for a few minutes, then add these ingredients and the drained oysters to the bread crumbs and dry seasonings.

Celery Stuffing

(10 to 12-pound goose)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter or other fat
1 cup chopped parsley
1 cup chopped onion
2 quarts bread crumbs
1 quart chopped celery (mixed stalks and tops)
1 tsp. celery seed
 $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. savory seasoning
1 to 2 tsp. salt
Pepper to taste.

In the melted fat cook the celery and onion for a few minutes and add to the bread crumbs, raw celery and seasonings.

Salt-Pork Stuffing

(Two 2-pound guineas)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ pound salt pork
1 quart bread crumbs
1 cup chopped celery
1 small onion, chopped
Salt and pepper to taste

Select mild salt pork containing strips of lean meat; wash off the loose salt, cut into small pieces, and fry until crisp. Remove the cracklings (the crisp pieces of meat and fat) and add to the bread crumbs. In the pan drippings cook the celery, parsley and onion for a few minutes and add to the crumbs and cracklings. Season to taste.

Mixed and Apricot Stuffing

(15-pound duck)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter or other fat
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped celery (mixed stalks and tops)
1 cup parsley, chopped
1 small onion, chopped
3 cups flaky boiled rice
 $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. savory seasoning
Salt to taste
 $\frac{1}{4}$ pound dried apricots.

In the melted fat cook the celery, parsley and onion for a few minutes. Add to the rice and dry seasonings. Wash and dry the apricots—wash should be plump with scissors, and mix with the and tender—then cut into strips rice and seasonings.

Experience is the Best Teacher

In planning for the future, Philadelphia Electric draws heavily upon the skill and experience of employees who have been serving the company for years. The two men shown above are typical of many on P.E. rolls. More than 74% of all P.E. employees have been with us at least 10 years; 16% for 25 years or more.

Magazines and newspapers have been filled with stories of "miracle-working gadgets" to come in the postwar days.

Frankly, we don't know anything about instruments to think for you, help you to read other people's minds or to see through stone walls. But in the world of electricity, wartime research has developed many improvements that are ready now to go into production as soon as materials are available.

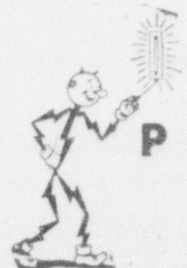

For instance, home lighting. Advanced knowledge will bring a new peak of perfection. Study and experiments have established different lighting levels for different needs; varied quantities of illumination; fluorescent lighting where it is helpful—in short, scientifically right illumination for each room.

The ways of doing this are ready right now . . . and no doubt will lead to further improvements, probably even the so-called "invisible lighting" expected to pour from hidden recesses in the walls.

All of which points to the new importance of electricity; new uses for it.

To be sure this five-county area has all the power necessary to enjoy this better way of living, Philadelphia Electric began advance planning long ago. Just one item—$13,000,000 for transmission lines, transformers, etc., within the next five years—indicates the thoroughness of our preparation to have the electricity you need, where you need it. Many other expansions also are under way, or are about to start.

BRISTOL AND MORRISVILLE HIGH SCHOOL ELEVENS MEET IN ANNUAL "TURKEYLESS" DAY BATTLE ON LOCAL FIELD TOMORROW; BOTH TEAMS ARE CONFIDENT

Back Row—Fiorelli, Nysse, McDevitt, Parrell, Oriola

The above seniors will play their last football game for Bristol High tomorrow morning at 10:30 a. m., when they meet Morrisville High School, on the Bristol High School field.

Both teams undefeated in league competition, Bristol and Morrisville will hold their 17th meeting tomorrow morning on the local gridiron. Opening kickoff will take place at 10:30 o'clock sharp.

The Bunnies and the Bulldogs have both scored triumphs over Bensalem and Langhorne, the other pair of teams in the Lower Bucks County circuit. Morrisville is the defending champion, having won the crown two seasons in a row.

On paper, the Bunnies appear to have the edge on their Morrisville rivals, according to comparative scores. Morrisville won over both Langhorne and P. S. D. in the last quarter of the game, while the boys of Coach Harold Stackhouse did not have much difficulty with these schools.

Also, Morrisville barely beat out the Riverside team and Bristol swamped the Jerseyites. Both clubs lost to Burlington, although the Bristol team outplayed their across-the-river rivals.

But scores mean nothing to the two teams who are always at their best on Thanksgiving Day morning, and the result will most likely be another close score, with either team coming through with fine plays to cop the verdict. The condition of the playing field may also come something to do with the outcome of the verdict, as the Bulldogs are noted for their powerful line plays, while the Bristol lads have running plays which will be bogged down on a muddy field.

Coach "Johnny" Hoffman, of the Bulldogs, will be without the services of two of his regulars, "Jimmy" Harms, flashy fullback, was injured early in the season and hasn't played since, and two weeks ago Harry Zack broke his arm and will also be out. The Morrisville coach had shifted Summers from a backfield post to center, but the injury to Zack may force him to again place Summers in the backfield.

Cummings and Baehr are now the mainstays of the Morrisville backfield and must be stopped. Banko will be used at quarterback with the line being composed of Wolf, Farkas, Marucci, Boodley, Moser and Baehr.

Coach Stackhouse's lineup is intact and he will start McDevitt, Parrell, Oriola and Fiorelli in the backfield, with the line being made up of Favoroso, Lelinski, Centonze, Mandio, Costantini, Feole and Keyes.

Bristol Area Lags Behind In War Chest Fund Drive

Rev. Neikirk said that the school children had distributed the folders prior to the canvass. He said their success this year was due to more canvassers and the fact that they were better organized.

Mess Sgt. Cook of the U. S. Infantry, who lost the sight of one eye, and was wounded in the arm in the Sabin Invasion, said at the meeting that his jungle training was the nearest thing to fighting the Japs as it really was. This training, he said, saved many American lives.

Sgt. Cook was in one group of U. S. Infantry troops that was surrounded by the Japs on Saipan and nearly wiped out. The Japs, in a suicide attempt, in desperation and close fighting, forced his unit to withdraw to the sea.

He was sent to a field hospital at New Caledonia where he commented on the U. S. O. and how it kept up the morale of the boys. He said that he missed seeing Bob Hope's show, while there, as he was confined to his bed. He was disappointed at not seeing Bob Hope because he said he was one of the best morale builders in the South Pacific.

On October 6, 1944, Sgt. Cook returned to California, where he enjoyed himself for a short while and visited three U. S. O's in Hollywood and also had the privilege of seeing many actors and actresses. He said that the U. S. O's there would find civilian homes for the boys to spend the night if there were none available in their dormitories.

Sgt. Cook was sent from California to the Valley Forge General Hospital where he states that he receives excellent care.

Those who were at the speakers' table included: Hon. Hiram Keller, chairman; Judge Calvin S. Boyer; A. A. Danzer and William Notter, vice-chairmen; Sgt. Cook; Colonel Churchill Williams; Mrs. Fretz and Mrs. Ander, of the Phoenixville Red Cross, who so kindly volunteered to drive Sgt. Cook to the meeting; and then to Valley Forge again; Leonard Halderman, of the Doylestown area and with the highest in the juvenile court of Bucks County is made public.

"The problem is nothing new, but during the past four or five years there has been a great increase. Last year there were about 225 such cases in the county courts. This number, plus the number of neglected children, about 400 this year, cost the county about $60,000. In a county of 107,000 population it seems high, but the county is so near large cities that is why it is higher than it otherwise would be.

"The war is not wholly to blame, but the home, church, school and community, because they failed in normal times to provide real programs for the children. The main cause is broken homes. From year to year the age of criminals is getting lower. The greatest number is in the 17 year old group."

Judge Keller said that one of the ways all can help to lessen this problem is by making conditions in the individual home favorable, providing proper recreational facilities in the community, and teaching the children to go to Sunday School and church.

A letter from Kimbel Faust, with the Army medical corps in China, was read, greetings being sent to the Rotarians.

A motion picture on the production of penicillin was shown by Elwood J. Rittenhouse, Jr., of Treves, a guest at the meeting. This proved very interesting and educational. Other guests were Manohar R. Reiter, Morrisville club; and Raymond W. Hoxworth, of Doylestown.

STATE BRIEFS

EASTON—(INS)—City firemen Frank Bahr found an opportunity to aid "man's best friend" and thus gained the appreciation of the S. P. C. A. He rescued a dog from a ledge 140 feet from the ground by climbing a rope thrown from the top of the cliff.

PITTSBURG—(INS)—Ernest Hufnagle, just turned 18, is on his way back to the war fronts, which he left as a veteran at the age of 16. It was on the bloody beaches of Salerno that the army discovered Hufnagle's true age and sent him home "to grow up." He had entered the service on a birth certificate which belonged to a dead brother.
